Question Of Soviet Jews Is Basic To Better Relations With Israel

The cancellation by Soviet authorities of an exchange by the Israel Philharmonic and Moscow State Orchestras has puzzled and angered Jerusalem officials.

Some saw the sudden move, ascribed by the Russians to "technical reasons," as more than an awkward and unavoidable snag in the unofficial cultural exchange program between the two countries, writes James Feron, in the New York Times. The impression is that the cancellation was part of the price that Soviet authorities were paying for closer relations with the new Syrian Government.

The Syrian Premier, Yussef Zayan, who took power in a coup two months ago, left Moscow with a Soviet pledge to help build a dam on the Euphrates River.

The Soviet Union wants Syria to oppose a proposed Islamic pact of Arab monarchs. Premier Aleksei N. Kosygin used the Syrian visit to denounce the proposed alliance.

Relations between Israel and the Soviet Union have never been cordial, and the cultural program had been regarded in recent years as providing the most promising area of exchange.

It was only in the last year that first-class Soviet artists have appeared in Israel. The violinist, David Oistrakh, played there two months ago and attracted huge throngs. A prominent Soviet writer, Konstantin Simonov, whose work has been translated into Hebrew, just left Israel.

The scheduled exchange of the orchestras was to have been the highlight of the slowly developing program. Attempts to re-schedule

Adenauer Deeply Upset By Israeli Memorial To Nazi Victims

A taut and drawn Konrad Adenauer visited Jerusalem's principal memorial to the six million Jews killed by the Nazis. The former West German Chancellor, who was in Israel on a private visit, has been honored by Israelis for his post-war contribution to reconciliation, says the New York Times. He was reminded of the reason for it all.

He spent an hour at Yad Vashem, a hilltop museum and memorial, and the experience seemed to drain the vigor from the ninety-year-old statesman. The rest of his morning schedule was called off.

Dr. Adenauer arrived at the memorial, which consists of several low buildings on the outskirts of the hilly city of Jerusalem at the start of his third day in Israel. He seemed rested and at ease as he was greeted by Yad Vashem officials.

These men, who maintain archives and conduct investigations of the Holocaust, as the wartime slaughter of Jews is known, answered Dr. Adenauer's questions, chatted briefly and then escorted him inside.

They entered a sunlit gallery of paintings and drawings depicting concentration camp scenes.

An elegant woman, "a duchess" someone said, was shown in one picture. She was in Theresienstadt, the camp in Czechoslovakia used by the Nazis as a show place for Red Cross and other inquiring officials, Dr. Adenauer was told. The camp even had a children's playground.

The former Chancellor signed the visitors' book, was given a memorial pin, and then heard a passage he had written in 1927 in Germany. It was from a booklet published by the German Pro-Palestine Committee and it associated Dr. Adenauer, who was then Mayor of Cologne, with Zionist ideals.

"It was written then, but it is still my absolute belief," he said.

The museum officials then expressed the hope that Dr. Adenauer would influence the West German Government to establish a center with the names of persons who died in the holocaust similar to one set up by the Netherlands Government. Dr. Adenauer said he would try, says the New York

HELLER, AIR POLLUTION EXPERT, CHOSEN BY NEW YORK, CALLED BEST CHOICE IN UNITED STATES

Mayor John Lindsay, of New York, announced the appointment of Austin Norman Heller as the city's $25,000-a-year Commissioner of Air Pollution Control. Mr. Hiller, fifty-one years old, has been deputy chief of the technical assistance branch of the division of air pollution, United States Public Health Service, says the New York Times, at the Robert A. Taft Sanitary Engineering Center in Cincinnati since 1961.

In accepting the appointment in a brief announcement ceremony, Mr. Heller said that "I will attempt to create and build a dynamic air resources program second to none in the nation."

He promised to use all available Federal and state assistance and added, "I cannot help but be impressed with the ground swell of public concern over the hazards to the city's environment."

Landing with the marines on Okinawa in 1945, Austin Norman Heller had two problems: to survive the kamikaze attack that greeted him and, as a staff sanitary engineering officer, to find pure water and get it to the troops.

By the time the island was secured, the man Mayor Lindsay named to be Commissioner of Air Pollution Control had done both. Indeed, he believes that the job he and other military engineers performed made Okinawa "the first battlefield in history where the death rate from disease was lower than the combat death rate."

Before Okinawa, Mr. Heller had worked on similar water problems at the Brooklyn Navy Yard. It was not until he joined the Allied Chemical Corporation in 1948 that pollution of the air became one of his concerns.

There, he recalls, the problem "simply fell into my lap" when he and other researchers were asked to find a way to make phthalic anhydride, a chemical used in paints, without releasing pollutants into the atmosphere, says the New York Times. The solution he found necessitated an "expensive operation," but Allied was pleased.

From group supervisor in charge of waste control in the plastics and cold chemicals division of the company, he rose to become long-range planning coordinator for the division by the time he left it in 1961.

A colleague at Allied remembers the six-foot, 175-pound engineer as "a pretty quiet type of fellow and a very easy man to get along with."

Even higher accolades come from the men he has worked with for the last three years in developing an air-pollution control program for Chicago. According to William J. Stanley, director of the city's Air-Pollution Control Department, "New Yorkers are damn fortunate to get such a top man — he's probably the best choice they could have made in the United States."

Mr. Heller, who served Chicago as consultant to the air-pollution control program from the United States Public Health Service, "is kind of our father image around here," Mr. Stanley said. "He's taken us over the humps when our program was a little rocky."

Although armed with a dry, self-deprecating humor and a soft-spoken manner, Mr. Heller "is tough when he has to be," Mr. Stanley added. "He is one of those quiet guys who carries a big stick."

Mr. Heller was born on August 18, 1914, in Elizabeth, N. J., but grew up in Perth Amboy.

By the time he had completed his junior year at Johns Hopkins, the money to continue his education "just ran out." At the age of twenty, he became a research assistant in the Agriculture School at Rutgers University at $30 a week.

Working there for three years, he became deeply involved with water and sewage problems and qualified to return to Johns Hopkins in 1938, says the New York Times, for a simultaneous bachelor's degree and scholarship to the University's School of Engineering and Science.

A year in Baltimore was followed by a research fellowship at the University of Iowa and, in 1941, a master's degree in sanitary bacteriology and chemical engineering. He enlisted in the Navy the day after Pearl Harbor and received his commission six months later.

Along with his experience with the waters of the East River and Okinawa, the Navy gave him a nickname (Tex, deviously derived from his first name), the permanent retirement rank of lieutenant commander, and an occasional propensity for nautical language.

"One of my first assignments when I come on board," Mr. Heller said, will be to assess the strengths and requirements of the department of which he is to take command July 1.

After that, he predicted, New Yorkers will start hearing some new language about air pollution. He likes to work in such terms as "air-use plans."

Before the summer, he hopes to find a Manhattan home for his wife, the former Miss Frances Sandler; their sixteen-year-old daughter, Sue Starr, a junior in high school; and their son, Richard David, twenty-two, a graduate biology student at Harvard.

The Heller family has been living in a town house in Cincinnati while Mr. Heller worked at the R. A. Taft Sanitary Engineering Center. Among the items he will be bringing East is a violin, little used since his high-school days, says the New York Times, and a surf-casting rod that he would like to put to work in a hunt for striped bass off Cape Cod.

GOLDBERG CALLS ON U.S. SENATE TO RATIFY RIGHTS TREATIES WITHOUT DELAY

Arthur J. Goldberg called for the immediate U.S. Senate ratification of the human rights treaties on genocide, slavery, forced labor, and the political rights of women.

"Our delay in ratifying these conventions has confused our friends and provided ammunition against us by our foes," the United States delegate to the United Nations told more than 1,000 delegates, says the New York Times, during the 60th anniversary annual dinner of the American Jewish Committee, at the Shoreham Hotel, in Washington.

However, Mr. Goldberg termed as "hypocritical" the criticism by Communist governments "for our delay in ratification."

"Their constitutional safeguards," he said of Communist regimes, "are still largely rhetorical, although I am happy to note somewhat improved in practice over the days of the Stalin terror."

Mr. Goldberg indicated that the Johnson Administration intended to press for Senate ratification of the controversial genocide convention and three other human rights treaties.

"Tonight I reaffirm the support of our Government for these conventions," he said.

Mr. Goldberg, who was introduced by Chief Justice Earl Warren, said there was an inconsistency in "our having ratified the Charter of the United Nations, which spells out human rights as one of the main purposes of the organization, and then hesitating to ratify conventions that give the Charter force."

He said the four conventions, including that dealing with genocide, "are consistent with our Constitution and that we need have no fears that they contravene our democratic laws which are more protective of human rights than anything the convention provides."

The Genocide Convention was adopted by the United Nations Assembly in 1948 after two years of preliminary debate, says the New York Times. It outlaws the planned mass killing of religious, racial, or ethnic groups, such as the Nazi murder of six million Jews.

The Genocide Convention has been ratified by the West German Government and the Communist states of Eastern Europe. The most prominent abstainers have been the United States and Britain. Britain has indicated its intention to ratify.

In 1949, President Truman transmitted the Genocide Convention to the Senate asking for its consent, but the Foreign Relations Committee failed to take action. The Eisenhower Administration ended formal discussion on the convention in 1953 when Secretary of State John Foster Dulles said that genocide "could better be reconsidered at a later date."

President Kennedy reversed the Eisenhower Administration when he sent to the Senate three subsequently drafted international human rights treaties. However, he did not press for passage of the convention on genocide.

The late Prof. Raphael Lemkin, international legal scholar coined the term genocide from the Greek "genos", meaning race or tribe, and the Latin for killing.

Sharing the dais with Mr. Goldberg were Joseph M. Proskauer, former New York State Supreme Court justice, and Jacob Blaustein, of Baltimore, former presidents of the Committee and now honorary presidents, and Morris A. Abram, New York lawyer, who is president of the Committee.

Earlier in the day, a report was issued by the Committee and the Southern Regional Council charging that the American people were being "deluded" about the progress of school integration in the South.

The report said that contrary to an assumption that "Federal money and Southern honor were bringing massive civil rights compliance", Southern schools were still largely segregated, says the New York Times. It pointed out that only five to six per cent of the South's 3,014,025 Negro children of school age were attending classes with whites.

Celebrating The Gift Of The Law To Moses On Mount Sinai

The Liberal Jewish Monthly, of London, England says: At the end of May we have celebrated Shavuos, once more, the Festival of Pentecost. Each year we hear of fresh attempts to infuse a little life-blood into the observance of this festival, and those congregations which have decided to combine their confirmation services with the festival services are to be congratulated. To some this may appear to be an innovation, yet Liberal Judaism has always advocated that the ceremony of confirmation — which recognizes the graduation of our young people to responsible Jewish life — should be linked with the Festival of Pentecost which recognizes the elevation of the whole Jewish people to responsible Jewish life. It seems this recommendation has been more honoured in the breach than in the observance.

Perhaps this is symptomatic of our whole attitude towards Jewish Law—hence the reason for the neglect of Pentecost, the Festival of Law. In a recent sermon, the Rev. John Rayner suggested that "we should build up a kind of Liberal Jewish Halachah, firmly grounded in Jewish tradition, thoroughly modern in its conclusions, comprehensive in its scope, unimpeachable in its reasoning."

One would have thought that the Ten Commandments were already in that category yet our congregants do not seem to be attracted to commemorate the Festival which emphasizes their fundamental importance. It is, perhaps, not so much new laws and new conclusions that are necessary, as a desire to apply self-discipline and an acceptance of the existing moral code which is lacking.

The generation of the wilderness replied, "We will do and we will listen"; our generation seems disposed neither to do nor to listen. The stones on which the Decalogue was engraved have become memorial stones for a dead faith, and the modern descendants have even forgotten the Yahrzeit.

Let us turn to the new generation, and hope that some of our confirmees this year will remember Shavuot and its message in their personal life and in the life of the House of Israel, and while others are attracted by the golden calf, they will be prepared to "do and listen."

There are two extreme ways of considering the Biblical literature. One way is to consider it the infallible word of the Divine. The other way is to consider it no more than a collection of writings of an ancient Near Eastern people. Between these two points of view there are many others. Is it possible to hold a view which combines the truths that are imbedded in both the extreme positions? Is it possible to hold a critical view of the origins of the Bible, and still regard it as containing the message of God? If we attain such a view, do we then consider that all words written by men contain the message of God? If we do not, what then is distinctive about the Bible?

God reveals himself in many ways. He reveals himself in the processes of nature. When scientists investigate the processes of nature, they are also investigating the working of God. He reveals himself in the mind of man: A philosophical enquiry into the nature of truth is also an enquiry into the nature of God. The result of a philosophical enquiry by an atheist may provide an insight into the nature of God. He reveals himself in the creations of the artist, who in interpreting the predicament of man will add to our understanding of the ways of God.

God reveals himself more directly to those who are expressly looking for him. He reveals himself to the visionary, to the prophet, to the theologian. A knowledge of God may therefore be communicated through the transmission of their experiences, or their thoughts, in their writings. The Bible is a collection of such writings created by men who were looking for God.

There are other collections written which Judaism has declared heretical; and it would be in accord with Jewish teaching to hold that man, by administering law, must act as an instrument through which God's retributive justice is exercised, must co-operate with God in maintaining the moral order of the world, so that right-doing is rewarded and wrong-doing punished. Nevertheless, it is permissible, at any rate in Progressive Judaism, to have second thoughts about this, as about other traditional doctrines.

QUESTION OF SOVIET

the exchange have fallen on deaf ears at the Soviet Embassy in Tel Aviv. Officials there say that the exchange had nothing to do with the Government, that it was handled by private booking agencies.

But there are many there, including a fair proportion in the Government, who see another obstacle to Soviet-Israel relations, possibly a more basic one, says the New York Times. That is the question of Soviet Jews.

There are three million Jews in the Soviet Union. Israel has long sought a Soviet policy that would permit their free emigration, presumably to Israel. Pressure for the release of Soviet Jews has also come from the United States and Britain.

One Israeli Government official told friends weeks ago that the Israeli orchestra would never make its Soviet tour.

"Can you imagine the feeling in that audience when the orchestra played Hatikva [the Israeli national anthem]?"

The emotional response among Soviet Jews to the arrival in 1948 of Israel's first Ambassador to Moscow, Golda Meir, apparently made a deep impression on Soviet officials. Discussion between the two countries on the subject of Soviet Jews has remained strained through the years.

A few weeks ago the Soviet Ambassador in Israel, Dmitri Chuvakhin, met with Premier Levi Eshkol to see how relations could be improved. Among his complaints was that the Soviet Government was being harassed by the Israeli press. Newspapers there give considerable attention to the state of Jews in the Soviet Union.

Israeli officials say they foresee a slow improvement in relations with Moscow, but they think it will be a product of Moscow's realization that Israel cannot be ignored, says the New York Times. The abrupt cancellation of the orchestra exchange has reminded the Israelis that relations are far from satisfactory.

FIRST CENTRALIZED BUREAU IN CANADA, ONE OF SIX IN N.A., FOR FINDING HOMES FOR FOSTER CHILDREN, IS IN MONTREAL; TALK ABOUT IT

From Commentator, published by the Montreal Council of Social Agencies

The first centralized bureau in Canada and one of the first half dozen in North America devoted entirely to the job of finding suitable homes for foster children was opened in Montreal recently. The new bureau, The Foster Home Recruiting Centre, is a three-year experimental project under the auspices of the Montreal Council of Social Agencies which, for the time being, will serve the English-speaking Catholic Welfare Bureau, the Children's Service Centre (Protestant), and the Jewish Child Welfare Bureau.

Intersectarian, the Centre does not exclude other placement agencies from membership but, until the experiment is tried, groups which might opt for membership in future have agreed to wait: it is better to lay foundations while carrying part of the load than all of it.

This approach was approved by placement agencies in metropolitan Montreal, by Le Conseil des Oeuvres, and by M. Roger Marier, Deputy Minister of Social and Family Welfare, Quebec City. Meanwhile, some of the temporary "outsiders" will appoint official observers.

The idea of establishing a centralized foster home recruiting centre in Montreal first appeared in 1962 when representatives from the three mentioned agencies met to discuss problems of mutual concern. The meeting agreed that common needs could be met more forcefully through a single, joint enterprise, and elected a Committee consisting of Board and professional staff representatives to investigate possibilities which would suitably meet these needs.

Subsequently, this Committee studied other central foster homes recruitment centres, examined methods and budgets, and heard a presentation of the results of the then six-year old project in Cleveland, Ohio, which was presented in Montreal by Norman Shaw, Associate Editor of the Cleveland Press, and a prominent lay leader in this particular work.

In June, 1964, proposals made by the Foster Home Finding Recruitment Project to interested bodies said:

"While child care agencies constantly strive to keep children together with their own homes and families wherever possible, the tensions and stresses of modern urban living often defeat many of our neighbours and friends in the efforts to fulfill their duties as parents and families. Rightfully, the community has organized itself to intervene and sustain such bereaved children and broken homes until either they can be reunited or other plans can be made."

Shortly after these and related proposals were submitted, the three relevant Boards of Directors empowered the Committee to proceed with plans for a three-year community pilot project, and to attempt to get the required finances outside the Federation of Jewish Community Services, the Federation of Catholic Charities, and the United Red Feather Services.

As typified the project from its beginning, hurdles were jumped promptly, and funds were obtained from private donors and the Jewish Junior Welfare League. Attractive office furnishings were supplied by the Rotary Clubs of Montreal and Westmount. Once the experimental period is over, however, it is hoped that federations, governments and other groups will express their appreciation to the original donors by taking over the financial responsibility for this much needed work with regularly budgetted funds. The Centre can fulfill its ultimate goal of serving the whole community only if the whole community provides its full-hearted support.

The chairman of the Centre's Administrative Committee is Mrs. Arnold Fisher, board member of the Jewish Child Welfare Bureau. The Committee shapes the policies of the Centre and promotes its function, and is directly responsible to the Board of the Montreal Council of Social Agencies.

Committee members are: the associate director of the Council; delegates from Boards and executive staff of the Council and the three placement agencies; and representatives of service groups and specialists in public relations. A Technical Committee comprised of professional workers, and a Public Information Committee are already active too.

In May, 1965, the Administrative Committee appointed Miss Eileen B. Griffin, executive director of the Centre. A graduate social worker, Miss Griffin's excellent qualifications include experience with five different children's groups among which were the British Evacuated Children and, more recently, the Children's Service Centre, Montreal, where she served as assistant executive director. Miss Griffin set up the Foster Home Recruiting Centre in a modern building at a convenient location: Suite 211, 4018 St. Catherine Street West and, after selecting a bilingual secretary, Mme G. Langlais, visited Cleveland's home-finding bureau to witness its continuing success first-hand.

The goals of the Foster Home Recruiting Centre are:

1) to recruit homes; 2) to improve the climate and attitudes of the public towards foster children by community education; and 3) to raise the status and recognition of foster parenthood to its rightful, commendable position in the community.

One of the main difficulties encountered by child placement agencies anywhere is in finding enough homes of high enough standard that children can be placed in them to advantage. The need for locating good homes continuously is more pressing than is commonly realized.

For one thing, there is a natural turnover in the existing lists of foster parents who, through no fault of their own, cannot continue to offer their homes. For another, the metropolitan population increases annually so that, even if the usual percentage of the foster homes needed remained constant, the number of homes needed rises annually.

A third reason is that modern-day living increases the proportion of homes which break down temporarily or permanently, or which do not form legally in the first place.

Fourthly, medical authorities consider that some children, institutionalized with physical or mental handicaps, progress more satisfactorily in the normal atmosphere of a family group.

More homes not only of sound quality but of varying backgrounds are needed, for, as a child's development progresses if he's in a happy home, it progresses even more if he's in a happy home which meets his special needs. Some foster parents manage babies better than they do adolescents, and vice versa; others have special understanding of children with physical or emotional problems. And while some foster children develop better in families where there are other children, some need parental attention which is virtually undivided.

Who are foster children? Foster children range in age from a few days to eighteen years. They come from all strata of society and, victims of circumstances beyond their control and understanding, are temporarily or permanently homeless.

Their own homes may have broken down because of physical or mental illness, because of physical and/or moral abuse, death, separation, desertion, or divorce. Many foster children have suffered deeply because of exposure to one or several circumstances such as these. All of them show the same general sense of being uprooted, lost, confused, hurt and belligerent.

And who are foster parents? Ask friends what they think foster parents are and some may say: They are people who love children; they are usually in the lower middle class and welcome the extra money they get for taking care of children; they care for children who are often difficult, and do so temporarily or permanently, as circumstances require; they are magnanimous people who do wonderful work; while many are desirable parents, some should not be permitted to care for children; many more, and better foster parents could be found if payments were increased to the point where families would not be out-of-pocket for offering foster care, but would not make a profit either. These attitudes are fairly representative of the public's opinion towards foster parents.

On the other hand, professionals in home care say that the very nature of foster children requires foster parents to be empathic, patient, tenacious, courageous, and wise.

They must be reasonable yet flexible, and strong enough financially to care for their own family needs. Foster families must accept total strangers in their own homes and give them not just food and shelter but comfort, kindness, firmness, and understanding. Above all, they must give love and a true sense of belonging to children who are — and who feel very deeply that they are — rejected by their own families and unwanted in the community.

Foster parents bear unique but very real pressures, one of which stems from the children. Practically by definition, foster children mistrust adults profoundly and so test their new parents to an extreme degree. At the same time — and perhaps for the same reason — they defend their own parents to their new ones, often expressing the wish to be with them again, no matter what hurts may have been dealt in the past.

Under circumstances like these, it is no mean accomplishment for new parents to give love while awaiting children's overtures of friendship.

Another pressure felt by foster parents is exerted by the natural parents — most of whom are loath to give up their children. It's very difficult for natural parents even to tolerate substitutes, and when visiting their offspring in foster homes, mental mirrors are evoked in which reflections are ugly. It's not surprising that natural parents sometimes strike back with resentment, jealousy, and hostility.

So foster parents must be understanding and patient with the children's parents as well.

Perhaps the strongest force foster parents feel is the knowledge that their children are — at best — only borrowed, and that the period is indefinite—in which they'll remain in their homes. For foster parents to undertake creating warm relationships between themselves and these children is difficult. But to do it knowing it may end at any time — perhaps when harmony is reached — is selfless and admirable. Community work such as this is not only of inestimable value, it is deserving of the public's highest esteem.

Aren't foster parents paid? Yes, they're paid — $40 upwards per month per foster child, depending on his age and special needs, if any. Every child is supplied with clothing, medical and dental services by the social agency which place him, and family allowances are made in some cases. But foster parenthood is not, and cannot be, a money making venture. The reward for doing this work is knowing that a child has been literally rescued from homelessness, and given a sense of belonging, well-being, and worth.

That the success of this project is heavily dependent upon continued publicity is obvious.

The local news media effectively launched the Centre with an "announcement campaign" following a press conference held in mid-September. And while the Centre and the Montreal Council of Social Agencies will — with their limited publicity resources — continue this work in an interpretative vein, herein lies an appeal to readers of Commentator to speak on behalf of the Centre to their service clubs, women's clubs, the clergy, PTA groups, etcetera.

More and more information about the Centre must be placed before the public continuously and repeatedly. All persons willing to help are invited to contact Miss Griffin. Telephone: 935-2589.

Dough

three eggs
two cups of sifted enriched flour
one-half teaspoon salt
one-half teaspoon of cinnamon or nutmeg chopped almonds, optional

Beat eggs in a large mixing bowl. Mix and sift together: flour, salt, cinnamon or nutmeg. Stir into eggs to form a stiff dough. Turn out onto a floured surface and knead one or two minutes. Roll small pieces of dough into one-half inch rolls and cut into one-quarter-inch squares.

Honey Syrup

one cup of honey
one teaspoon ginger
one cup sugar

After all the pieces are in the pot, reduce heat and cook for twenty minutes, using a wooden spoon to prevent boiling over. Do not stir while cooking. Turn out on a wet wooden board and pat with a wet wooden spoon to an even thickness. If almonds are used, spread them evenly over the wet board, before turning out taiglach carefully over them without spreading the nuts too far apart. Let cool, and cut into small diamond or square shapes, one to one and one-half inches in diameter.

abrupt changes on many matters of major and minor policy.

The study draws the conclusion: "There is no way of even guessing how many Zionists and how much Zionism could be, as of now, found among the three million Jews, whatever their number and scope, they must not be forgotten."

Mr. Torczyner, in his introduction, voiced the fervent hope that the "day will soon come when the Soviet government, in deference to justice and the voice of public conscience, will redress the great wrong being perpetuated against Zionism and Zionists and accord equality of treatment to the entire Soviet Jewish community."

UNIVERSITY OF LOUVAIN AND AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE SPONSOR PROJECT TO STUDY REFERENCES TO JEWS IN CATHOLIC TEACHINGS

A major development in carrying out Vatican Council II's "Jewish Declaration" through the study of references to Jews and Judaism in Catholic religious teachings has just been launched by scholars at the venerable Catholic University of Louvain, in Louvain, Belgium, one of Western Europe's greatest academic institutions. These scholars have started a 15-month examination of ways in which Jews and Judaism are portrayed in Catholic school texts, prayer books, and Bible commentaries in the French language, which is spoken by 60,000,000 Catholics.

Joint announcement of the study project was made at the 60th anniversary annual meeting of the American Jewish Committee, of which Morris B. Abram is president, co-sponsoring the research project and sharing its costs, by Philip E. Hoffman, chairman of the AJC board of governors, and by Canon François Houtart for Louvain University.

The specific purpose of the project, which already has aroused the interest of Catholic research and educational authorities throughout Europe, is two-fold: To determine how the Jewish world, both ancient and modern, is presented in Catholic religious materials used throughout French-speaking Europe, Africa, and Canada; and to set up a scientific method for study of references to Jews in other languages and in other kinds of literature.

The Statement on the Jews in the Vatican Council's Declaration on Non-Christian Religions, voted 1,763 to 250 on October 15, 1965, said:

"The Council wants to foster and recommend a mutual knowledge and respect which is the fruit, above all, of Biblical and theological studies as well as of fraternal dialogues."

Further in this statement, the Council declared: "The Jews should not be presented as rejected by God or accursed. The Catholic Church deplores hatred, persecutions, displays of anti-Semitism directed against Jews at any time and by anyone."

The project will be carried out jointly at Louvain University by the Socio-Religious Research Center, which was created in 1956 and is inter-disciplinary, joining the social sciences and theology; and the Catechistic Research Center, a branch of the Higher Institute of Religious Sciences, which is part of the Theology Faculty and whose particular purpose is teaching.

Directors of the project are: Canon Houtart, internationally renowned sociologist, who is director of Louvain's Socio-Religious Research Center and general secretary of the International Federation of Social Religious Research Institutes (FERES), and was a peritus (theological expert) at Vatican Council II in connection with the preparation of the Declaration on the Church and the Modern World; and Canon Jean Giblet, of the Catechistic Research Center. Jacques J. Dumont, of the Socio-Religious Research Center, will be in charge of the research.

The project has the enthusiastic support of Leo Cardinal Suenens, of Brussels-Malines, who is Grand Chancellor of the University. A leading personality at Vatican Council II, Cardinal Suenens was one of the four Cardinal moderators named by Pope Paul VI at the sessions that concluded last fall.

Liaison for the project for the American Jewish Committee is through Zachariah Shuster, European director. An AJC advisory committee, to provide consultative and other aid, is: Dr. John Slawson, executive vice-president; Mrs. Leonard M. Sperry, chairman of the Leonard M. Sperry Foundation for Intergroup Relations; Rabbi Marc H. Tanenbaum, director of Interreligious Affairs, and a member to be named from AJC's Scientific Research Department.

In announcing the project, Mr. Hoffman, chairman of the A.J.C. board of governors, said: "This program is further significant evidence of the commitment of Catholic authorities to come to grips with the problem of the religious basis of anti-Semitism. In the United States we are aware of the major steps forward being taken as a result of Catholic and Protestant self-studies of religious teaching materials stimulated by the American Jewish Committee. There have been a number of similar projects on the European Continent, but none has been conducted in as scientific and systematic a manner as that represented in this project, and none has been as comprehensive nor as broad in its effect.

"The fact that a scholar of Canon Houtart's standing and accomplishment and a major catechetical center have joined forces to implement this project is assurance that it will make a milestone contribution to the removal of the sources of negative attitudes toward Jews, and provide the basis for a positive understanding of Jews and Judaism in their own right."

The Louvain University project, the most intensive and elaborate study of teaching materials to be announced in the post-Vatican Council era, will examine French-language materials published between 1930 and 1965, a period unhindered by war or immediate post-war problems.

A control period is also to be taken, from 1925 to 1935, with samplings taken from this period for purposes of comparison. This period was chosen because it antecedes important changes in Catholic religious materials, yet the documentation of the period can be obtained without difficulty.

The study it to be based on the thesis that catechistic, liturgical, and Biblical Catholic literature, which help materially to form the mentality of Catholics, still contain references and omissions harmful to relations between Jews and Christians although improvements have been made.

As a first step in the study, a list of themes will be drawn up, based on studies already made both in Europe and the U.S. Each theme will be defined in a score of lines and examples given. As the work progresses, a series of secondary hypotheses will be drawn up, dealing for example with the lesser or greater degree of intensity of positions taken, considered as to types of documents, dates of publication, distribution areas, etc.

Next, a range of possible positions as well as of omissions will be drawn up in relation to the themes developed. This range will be codified, probably from one to nine. A test will then be drawn up for 20 documents of each type.

In searching documents for themes, each document will be read by two different scholars, and each will denote the range. Such judgments will be coordinated, then placed on cards, thus allowing for the conclusions of the study to be made.

The American Jewish Committee's involvement in the study of religious materials is a long-standing one. Over a period of years, studies sponsored by the Committee have clearly shown that bias against Jews had traditionally appeared in both Catholic and Protestant religious materials, and the presumption has been that anti-Semitism in part is being fostered by the use of such religious materials.

Findings of a massive study of Protestant textbooks, carried out at the Yale Divinity School by the Rev. Bernhard E. Olson, were published as a book, "Faith And Prejudice", in 1963. Results of a parallel survey of Catholic religious texts, prepared by Sister M. Rose Albert Thering, O.P., at Saint Louis University, were released during 1964.

The American Jewish Committee took an even more direct role regarding bias in religious texts at the Vatican Council. During the preparatory phase of the Council, the Committee, at the request of Church authorities, submitted detailed research data documenting the presence of anti-Jewish elements in Catholic teachings and liturgical writings.

The first of three memoranda, entitled "The Image Of The Jew In Catholic Teaching", drew heavily on the textbook studies with which the Committee had been involved for 30 years. The document cited and analyzed hostile references to Jews as a group; unfair comparisons between Judaism and Christianity; and the failure to acknowledge the Jewish roots of the Christian religion.

Most important, the memorandum quoted many references to the Jews as an accursed nation of deicides suffering exile and persecution for their alleged collective guilt in the death of Jesus.

A companion memorandum, "Anti-Jewish Elements In Catholic Liturgy", also focused mainly on the deicide accusation. It acknowledged the recent removal of anti-Jewish expressions from the liturgy, but went on to emphasize that prejudiced material remained in certain texts, particularly those read in churches during Holy Week, and in commentaries on the liturgy prepared for the use of the faithful.

After recalling the fate of European Jewry under Hitler, the document closed with the request that the Church find ways of rectifying liturgical passages that "stimulate and reinforce the slanderous concept of the Jews as a cursed, despised, deicide people."

A third memorandum, "On Improving Catholic-Jewish Relations", suggested that the Council recognize the "integrity and permanent preciousness" of the Jews, rather than as potential converts, condemning anti-Semitism, and explicitly reject the deicide charge.

The proposal foresaw measures as the creation of a permanent high-level commission at the Vatican to watch over Catholic-Jewish relations and take the lead in combating prejudice; official Church encouragement for cooperation in civic and charitable endeavors, and joint research projects and publications.

Louvain University, with a student body of 20,000 lay and ecclesiastical students, gathered from 50 countries, has held an important place in Western intellectual life for more than 500 years. It was founded December 9, 1425, by Pope Martin V, and is the oldest Catholic university in the world. Erasmus, the eminent humanist from Rotterdam, founded its College of Three Tongues, Latin, Greek, and Hebrew, a prototype of similar colleges later erected in other countries.

The burning of the famed Louvain Library by the Germans during World War I aroused the indignation of the civilized world. A new library, the gift of Americans, has engraved on its columns and walls the names of the many schools, colleges, and universities in the U.S. that contributed to its construction.

Menuhin Birthday Concert Was Family Event With Him As "Our Hero"

For his fiftieth birthday concert in Festival Hall, in London, Yehudi Menuhin appeared as soloist, conductor, patriarch of the remarkable Menuhin family, and in the words of Sir Adrian Boult "our hero" for a vast audience who gave him an affectionate ovation.

It was a family occasion. Mr. Menuhin's pianist son, Jeremy, a fourteen-year-old Eton schoolboy, was making his first London appearance, and Mr. Menuhin's two sisters, Hephzibah and Yaltah, also took part, says the New York Times. Other ties were not forgotten. Leaders of four European orchestras with which Mr. Menuhin has been closely associated — The Vienna Philharmonic, the Orchestre Nationale de Paris, the London Philharmonic Orchestra, and the Bath Festival Orchestra — came to London to play Vivaldi's Concerto in B minor for four violins. Josef Sivo, leader of the Vienna Philharmonic, brought with him a large laurel wreath as a tribute.

Mr. Menuhin, slim, fair-haired looking much younger than his years, was obviously touched by the warmth of the occasion. He chose to play Beethoven's two Romances for Violin and Orchestra, the second of which was the most impressive. The beautiful central melody, played with superb purity and sweetness of tone, was like an act of thanksgiving.

As conductor, he drew a spirited accompaniment from the London Philharmonic for Mozart's Concerto for Three Pianos, in which the soloists were Jeremy, Hephzibah, and Yaltah Menuhin. Jeremy's part was a good deal simpler than the other two, but he acquitted himself with playing of some style.

The rest of the program, conducted by Sir Adrian Boult, consisted of Beethoven's Namensfeier [Birthday Party] Overture, suitably appropriate, and Mozart's Symphony No. 35, the "Haffner."

Ambassadors, politicians, distinguished conductors, soloists and other musicians were in the audience, testifying to the regard in which Mr. Menuhin is held, not only as a musician but also as one of the rare spirits of this age, says the New York Times. Born in New York, he is now a world citizen, the ex-wunderkind (ex-wonderchild) who survived infant genius to become the realized artist and man.

The proceeds of the concert, $28,000, is being given to assist a school for young violinists, founded by Mr. Menuhin in Surrey.

Z. O. A. Publishes Documentary Survey On Treatment Of Zionism And Zionists In Soviet Russia

A comprehensive documentary survey, the first of its kind to be published in the U.S., has appeared under the title, "Zionism And Zionists In Soviet Russia, Greatness And Drama", in a 94-page brochure published by the Zionist Organization of America.

Compiled and edited by the noted leader and historian, Dr. Joseph B. Schechtman, of New York, the study chronicles the dramatic epic of the long struggle by Russian Zionists for survival. It traces the persecution of the Zionist movement and its followers in Russia from 1900 until the present time.

Dealing with one of the most tragic chapters of the martyrdom of a major segment of a great Jewish community, the study focuses attention on the fact that Zionism and Zionists were the first victims of persecution in Russia since the beginning of the 20th century, foreboding the treatment which was to be meted out eventually to the entire Jewish community in that country. Zionism is shown to have been illegal under the Czarist regime and its suppression intensified in later years under Bolshevik rule.

"Zionism And Zionists In Soviet Russia" has been issued by the Public Affairs Department of the Z.O.A. Jacques Torczyner, president of the Zionist Organization of America, in his introduction says: "In its endeavor to focus world attention on the specific plight of Zionism and Zionists in Soviet Russia, the Zionist Organization of America is not concerned with involvement in the Cold War aspect of the present world situation. Our sole concern is to place on the record of history the facts of the continuing persecution and tribulations suffered by Zionists; the prohibition of Hebrew, and other repressive measures which constitute part of the cultural genocide threatening a once great and spiritually creative Jewish community. This powerful reminder is essential in the light of attempts to treat the Jewish problem in Soviet Russia as a strictly religious problem, ignoring the basic fact that the Jewish community there is an integral part of Jewish peoplehood, deeply rooted in historic and cultural traditions."

The study points out that Zionism as idea and movement emerged among the Jews of Russia even before Theodor Herzl, founder of modern Zionism, propagated the Jewish State. The six-million Jewish community, oppressed, restricted, and impoverished though it was, was yet active culturally and possessed of a proud national conscience. It was in Odessa in 1903 that the first Jewish self-defense force was organized by Vladimir Jabotinsky, the father of the Jewish Legion in World War I, and organizer (in 1920) of the first Haganah (self-defense) corps in Jerusalem, the predecessor of the Israeli army.

The study recounts that when the Bolsheviks came into power in November, 1917, they found a powerful and dynamic Zionist mass movement. In its early stages the regime did not noticeably affect Zionist activities; but as the Communists began to consolidate their power and to combat all "counter-revolutionary" manifestations, Zionism fell under the heading of a diversionary "bourgeois" expression of nationalism. In 1918 the Jewish Commissariat "Yevkom" was established and the combatting of Zionism was proclaimed as one of its chief aims.

Marked by brief intermittent periods of respite, by the middle 1920's, arrests, imprisonment, and banishment became the common fate of many Zionists. By the end of 1924, thousands of Zionists were languishing in Soviet prisons and detention camps. A noted writer, who was himself an inmate of Soviet prisons, relates that as late as 1941 he met in the deportation camps in the Soviet Far North Zionist leaders who had spent sixteen or seventeen years there.

Under the same policy, the study of Hebrew was forbidden as a "foreign" and a "dead" language. The brochure relates in detail the short but highly successful career of the Hebrew "Habimah" theatre, the very existence of which seemed to deny the Soviet allegations.

The study carefully traces changing Soviet policy during World War II. With the expansion of Soviet territory at the beginning of the War, the U.S.S.R's Jewish community increased by two million. At first, the Zionist movement in these territories was treated to the same fate as its counterparts in the Soviet Union. However, political developments soon dictated another course: after the Nazi invasion of Soviet Russia, Moscow began to seek the support of world Jewry, and proclaimed the brotherhood of Jews the world over.

With the end of the war, Moscow returned to its former "hard line", until political considerations in Middle East policies came to the fore again: this time expressed in Moscow's support of a Jewish state in Palestine and the supply of arms, via Czechoslovakia, to Israel, in the ensuing war of liberation against the invading Arab armies.

But the Soviet authorities looked askance at the enthusiastic welcome accorded by Soviet Jews to the establishment of a Jewish State, regarding it as a revival of the "Zionist hydra". The pendulum of hostility soon swung backwards again, culminating in the equation of Zionism with Nazism by the Soviet representative in the United Nations, in an address before the Social, Humanitarian and Cultural Commission in October, 1965.

The survey sounds a hopeful note on the prospect of the Soviet Government permitting the emigration of Soviet Jews to Israel: "Under certain circumstances the Soviet rulers would not be inflexibly opposed to Jewish emigration to Israel. The over-all Soviet approach to this issue is not at all as dogmatically rigid and immutable as is generally believed. The Kremlin has manifested, time and time again, a capacity for
